Venezuelan, is now a sort of "Flying Dutchman," making a desperate effort to reach a friendly port in his native country, and just as he nears his goal, being turned back, not by storms, but by watchful guardians of the Venezuelan coast or warships of other nations, which seek to prevent a renewal of his activities in his own country.

According to this official, the basis for stories that Castro had landed in Western Venezuela was the appearance off the little Dutch island of Aruba of the yacht Coronet, flying the American flag. She sent a boat ashore, under pretense of buying supplies, but so limited were the purchases that it was evident the ship stood in no great need of food. The inhabitants reported Haiti is the most lawless country it ever saw."

This is the summing up of the situation at Port Au Prince given by Captain Willy Arens, the German officer who brought the mysterious Haites cruiser, Consul Grostuck, across the coean on her recent trip from Italy Captain Arens is sightseeing in New York this week, having shaken the dust of the Haitlen capital from his feet as soon as his mission was inside positively that General Cipriano Castro had not been either one of the crew or a passenger on the Consul Grostuck, with her leaky boliers, is one I shall not soon forget, he said. The ship was in awful shape, her funnels were rusted away at their base and her guns were well nigh useless.

"When at last the steamship was delivered to President Simon four salutes were fired, and since then the guns have not been used. As the ammunition lies exposed to the heat of a tropical sun, it would not be surprising if a premature explosion blay.
